OUR POOR.

In addition to what we have already said upon the question of taxes, we desire to call the attention of our tax-payers to the cost of maintaining our poor, and the manner in which they are cared for.

The poor tax of this borough last year, if we are not mistaken, was about $4,000, and the entire poor tax of the county is something over $20,000. The regular dependents on our borough, are thirteen in all, excepting comers and goers who would average the year round, not more than one per day. In Blair county the cost of maintaining her poor has cost less than $9.000, although her population is almost equal to Centre. There is a saving in favor of Blair county, amounting to about $11,000. We note from a paper before us that the cost of maintaining the poor of Chester Co., whose population is over 95,000, average $1,31 per day for each individual, amounting in all to $19,000. It is fair to estimate that the poor of either of these counties does not exceed in number that of our own, and it is certain there can be no difference in the cost of maintaining. Blair county, with a population equal to Centre, pays but little over twice the amount that Bellefonte pays, with a population of 3,000. Chester county, with nearly double the population of Centre, does not pay within $1000 as much poor tax as our county does. But Blair and Chester counties have a county poor house and farm. There is the secret of the economy. Would it not pay Centre county to do likewise? At the most liberal estimate of the cost of maintaining the poor, it would make a saving of not less than $10,000 per year to the county. There is no good reason why such a step should not be taken immediately. Economy, and justice to the tax payers seem to demand it.

When a man does his duty as a public servant, no matter in what capacity, he is sure to become unpopular. An honest line of duty, honestly and carefully marked out and strictly adhered to, is not calculated to coin popularity from the masses. The few honest and well thinking people will endorse his course, but the petty politician can bias the opinions of the balance of the power. Let a man make a reputation for unswerving integrity and honesty of purpose, and he is in no sense suited for the local politician. On the day of election, if he trusts to his record as a public servant and the good sense of his constituents, (both of which are as nothing to influence votes,) he is sure to be defeated. To be a successful office seeker, for positions great or small, the successful candidate must come down to all the degrading trickery of the professional vote teaser; he must forsake his manhood and work on some other capital than his good name and faithful performance of duty. Men who will not do these, generally fall behind when the vote is counted, and get the name of being unpopular, when they are generally the most deserving. We have noticed these facts in our own borough politics, and have in our mind a case in point: The republican candidate for the Council in the South ward was defeated because he was a good, honest man, and a most valuable citizen, and because he would not resort to the petty wiles that his opponents practiced. The blame of his defeat don't exactly rest upon either candidate, but upon the simpering, idle minded volatility of certain members of his party whose votes are worth but a song and are purchased at par. Such results, the one in question, drive good men out of positions they dererve, and fill them with figure-heads.

THE WOMAN CRUSADE AGAINST RUM.

We have already alluded to the crusade against the liquor traffic which was inaugurated by the women in a small town in Ohio. This movement with varying success, has rapidly spread over a large portion of the State and is being tried in other States and at points far distant from the place where it began.

The plan is for a band of praying women and men and sometimes women alone, to visit drinking saloons and hold prayer meetings and in this way to bring a religious influence to bear upon those in the business. The wonderful success which has attended these efforts in some instances, has given a remarkable impetus to the movement, and sanguine ones are predicting that it will result in a temperance millenium.

Last week it was determined by some twenty clergymen belonging to the Massachusetts State Temperance Alliance, to inaugurate the movement in that State, and after considering the advantages of several places as points of attack, it was finally decided to begin at Worcester. The result will be looked for with much interest and upon its success will depend the action of those who have undertaken this novel method of closing up the dram shops.

Within the past forty years we have seen several phases of the temperance cause. The first methed was purely a moral one, and public lectures and the pledge were the principal means relied upon for effecting its objects. Its aims were to reform the drunkard by appealing to his better nature and awakening in his mind a consciousness of his evil practices. This great movement spread over a large extent of country and was the means of accomplishing a vast amount of good. Social drinking which had ever been regarded as respectable and was indulged in by both churchman and layman, became disreputable, and the trafic in liquors which up to that time had always been sustained by public sentiment, was no longer followed by those who desired to keep their places in good society. This movement developed a peculiar class of orators who, in many respects resemble revival preachers and wherever they went, they met with remarkable success.

Then followed the legal phase of the subject or the coercion of those dealers who could not be reached by moral forces. This phase of the subject was inaugurated in the State of Maine which furnished a technical name for this peculiar form of legislation, and some form of the "Maine Law" has been enacted in most of the New England, Middle and in some of the Western States. If moral suasion and legal coercion could have joined hands and worked together, they would have been nearly or quite irresistable. but such was not the case. The moral suasion effort began to decline as soon as coercive measures were used, and for a few years temperence men have depended mostly upon the enforcement of the law against sellers for the suppression of intemperance. Wherever the laws have been sustained by public sentiment, they have accomplished great results, but where this has not been the case, they have been a dead letter, and all attempts at effective enforcement have proved abortive. In this respect they are not singular, for it is so with all enactments which are designed to promote the cause of morality and virtue.

The woman's crusade is unparalleled in respect to the means employed and must be denominated the religious phase of the question. In most places where it has prevailed it has started almost spontaneously, and it enlists the sympathies and co-operation of so large a portion of each community, that it at once becomes irresistable.

There has been no popular movement for many years which has excited so much general interest as this, and the universal question is, what will it amount to and how much of permanent good will it accomplish? Outside of the scenes of its active operations, there is much incredulity on the subject, and a prevailing opinion that its effectiveness can only be temporary in any place, and that in the larger cities, it can accomplish little if anything.

But even if its direct results are limited, as all human efforts necessarily are, like the movements which have preceded it, it is an educator of the public, and the public sentiment, zeal and enthusiasm which it produces, will tend more and more, to unite the community against an evil which has long enthralled the civilized world.

It is natural that a woman should feel a deep interest in any movement for the suppression of the liquor traffic. for the dead weight of the dreadful business falls heavily upon her. To thousands of them the money that goes to fill the coffers of the liquor dealer, is the price of bread and perhaps of blood. It is no wonder that those who have experienced its terrible effects, should enlist in the holy crusade against the infamous traffic, and that others who have not suffered directly, should engage in it from sympathy with its humane objects. This new movement, so far as it is directed by discretion, will have the good wishes and moral support of all lovers of morality and virtue, wherever they may be. Wherever zeal overcomes discretion, and acts of violence are committed all efforts at reform will be more than neutralized. If reports are to be believed, some acts have already been committed which ill comport with the gentle spirit of the gospel. Whips in the hands of women, and slung shots carried by their male associates, are not calculated to soften the hearts and change the minds of those upon whom they are used. Ridicule must certainly fall upon their religious efforts, if they undertake to supplement them by the use of carnal weapons.

Our faith is not strong in the moral power of this movement to restrain keepers of groceries from selling, any longer than the pressure is continued upon them, but so far as it creates and strengthens public sentiment against the use of alcholic stimulants, its effect will be salutary and permanent.

Railroad Passes.

The following from the Toledo Blade is so appropriate in its dealing with the subject of which it treats that it can well be passed around by our contemporaries:

"Many persons suppose that newspapers derive the greatest benefits from railroad passes and that the courtesy extended to the press by railroad companies is designed as a bribe, and that it does influence public journals to do wrong where railroad interests and public interests conflict. This is all a mistaken theory. In the first place, public journals receive but a small per cent. of the passes issued by railroad companies. In the next place, they fully compensate for their annual or special passes by advertising for the railroads. At the beginning, it would be difficult to build railroads but for the aid which such enterprises receive at the hands of the press. Through the press the people are educated to see and appreciate the importance of aiding to build railroads. Public journals are expected to do this gratuitously. And then it is expected that the public journals will keep the public advised of the running time of railroads in their vicinity, and to give such information as may be of interest to the public or the roads. All this must be done gratuitously. The railroad company and the public are alike benefited by these things, and there is no reason why the journals should not be compensated for this work. Heretofore, it has been customery to accept passes on the roads as compensation for this service. Certainly there could be nothing wrong in this. Journalists had the right to demand the cash for their services, but they have accepted passes in lieu of the cash. They feel that instead of being bribed by railroad companies, they are the creditors of the road. Let the conductors of public journals on the lines of the roads at the West which have abolished the pass system, charge for their work for the road and at end of the year give the amount of their receipts from that source, and the amount paid out for railroad tickets. The result will tell the story.

DRUNKENESS.

BY REFORMATION.

When will this curse be banished from amongst us? Can we look for temperance in either of the two great political parties? They were not created for that purpose. Party prejudice is a black veil, used by his Satanical Majesty to debar the progress of temperance, religion and morality. We see this fully exemplified in the every-day walk of our lives, of the present day, with history to the full exemplification for the ages that are past. No, neither of the two great parties have ever conceived the one great idea, paramount to every other, that the first need of the nation is to get the nation sober. It was really humiliating, last fall, to the mind of every true-hearted temperance man, to hear and see the movements among the candidates of the two parties—the temperance Democrats claiming their men to be the temperance men, the temperance Republicans claiming their men to be the temperance men, while the candidates of both parties virtually denied being pledged to any such platform. Temperance Democrats, and in the special sense, what answer can you to your conscience and your God make, who voted for a whiskey candidate for Senator, while you were at the same time lecturing on temperance and calling upon God to crown your efforts with his blessing. I can prove my charge thus made. What I witnessed with my own eyes and ears I can and will proclaim, without fear, favor, or affection. Some of your professed leaders in the house of God, preaching temperance before the election, then on election day voting for Joseph S. Waream, and since the election still continue lecturing and praying for the cause of temperance. And after the result of the ballot-box was fully known, and in due time thereafter, the fruit of your diabolical work, in a good, sound drunken spree, was baptized unto you in the shape of thanks in the streets of Philadelphia. And still you continue to preach temperance, or profess so to do; pray loud on the Divine Power of Heaven to aid you in converting men from the curse of rum, and at the same time voting damnation to human souls at the "ballot-box." Let no man deceive himself. I fancy many among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool that he may be wise, for the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. For it is written, He taketh the wise in their own craftiness—1st Cor.: Chap. 3, 18th and 19th verse. The reason why there is always a majority on the side of the wicked is because the greater part of the righteous, poor souls, are faint-hearted. They cannot bear to be in the minority, even when the God of Hosts is on their side, and when the test comes Satan steps forward under the great banner, Political Prejudice, and every manly and noble feeling of the human heart is sacrificed upon this altar of defamation. The odium thus cast upon the temperance Democrats, so-called, is just as applicable to the temperance Republicans, so-called. The temperance cause cannot prosper in the ranks of either party. The cause of local option stands to-day, in relation to the two political parties, as did that of Christ to the Scribes and Pharisees over eighteen hundred years ago. And the same principle of antagonism that pervaded the minds and hearts of the Scribes and Pharisees against the mission of Christ is precisely the same to-day among those who are raising the hue and cry that Local Option is a failure. The lips that give utterance to such a declaration cannot but be the accomplice of the heart of depravity. Woe unto the world because of offences, for it must needs be that offences come, but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh.—Matt. Chap. 18, 7th verse.

It is high time that those who make such loud pretensions of religion and morality consider what they are doing, when lending aid and support to the cry of Local Option is a failure. This cry cannot be made in any shape or form without condemning the great plan of salvation through the blood of a crucified Redeemer. Have you thought of this. But whoso shall offend one of these little ones who believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he was drowned in the depth of the sea—Matt. 18th and 62d.

Then prepare for the impending crisis. The war is inevitable. The issue of this conflict is to be the establishment of a principle fraught with momentous consequences. The Local Option question is the great overshadowing problem of the time, of the moment, of the hour. God grant that those who fill high places on earth will ponder well what they do. To cast a ballot against Local Option will be to bring down the vengeance of an outraged God upon the actor. Man that is in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish—Pslams 49th, 20th. To labor to promote the cause of temperance or local option is the highest duty of all. In whatever sphere in life they may be placed, not a single individual can escape under any name or subterfuge or for any reason whatever. What an era of happiness would dawn upon the people if the government, instead of seeking how to plunder the people most successfully should seek to promote their best interests everywhere for time and eternity. The Rev. George Lansing Taylor, in a communication to the Western Christian Advocate, has these forcible and truthful remarks: "The American nation has no more right to make an internal revenue from rum than from piracy, and it is as much bound to quarantine wine or brandy from our shores as yellow fever or small pox. Governments exist to benefit and protect, not to prey upon and blast the people. We shall come to see it so by-and-bye, and then temperance will become a power in American politics, as England's greatest statesman rejoices that it is coming to be in England. We have been too long afraid of taking this mad bull by the horns, but it must come to that, and he must be stoned at the ballot-box all over the nation, and his beastly carcass thrown out to all the carrion fowl of heaven. Let every vote cast, like the Athenians' voting pebbles in the voting urn, ring sharp and clear his death knell, and America would see a miracle of temporal prosperity and heavenly salvation in a few years.

But we must cast out every obstacle now retarding the progress of Local Option, and press forward with a will characteristic of the cause. We want no more drum head temperance lecturers, whose only aim is to aggrandize self at the price of tears, groans and blood. What has become of the Centre County Local Option Association? What has become of "The Open Temperance Union" of Centre county? Who got up certain interrogatories at a meeting held in Milesburg, Sept. 12, 1873? The responses to these interrogatories are well known. The candidates to whom they were addressed some got elected, some got drunk, and some did not, so report says. Was it the temperance votes that caused the drunkenness, or was it the singular compound mixture? What a beautiful halo this thing flung around something. We may at some future time be able to define that "something." When last seen it was in the boat of "Covetousness," sailing under a strong wind on the "Lake of Deception." The captain, so my informer says, was an old grey-headed chap, called Demas, and the craft seemed to be making headway for a certain mountain in the distance called "Lucre." The crew has not yet returned. I hope I will be able to give you a full history of this strange craft soon.

Snow Shoe Items.—Miss Mollie McCoy's school exhibition proved a success and gave the audience further evidence of her skill as a teacher. Everyone seemed to enjoy it, and nothing occurred to mar the evening's pleasure until after the exhibition had closed, when a most dastardly assault was made on a young couple after they had started home. Samuel Lucas, a young man living on the other side of the Moshannon, went to the school house during the day while it was being fitted up for the evening's entertainment, and insisted on going in. Roland Sweetwood, one of the pupils, objected, as he would only be in the way. Lucas struck the boy. They were separated and no further trouble occurred until after the exhibition, when, as Sweetwood in company with Miss Ettie Howard was leaving the school house, Lucas followed them. They were going along unconscious of the coward's intention, when Lucas, who carried a piece of board about four feet long, struck at Sweetwood and hit Miss Howard across the small of the back. Miss H. is in a very critical condition and her injuries may prove fatal. Lucas was arrested, and is now under five hundred dollars bail for his appearance at court. His good name is not perceptably injured by this affair, as he kindly kicked a woman at church not long ago and thereby added fresh laurels to his already brightened fame. The cowardly would-be assassin laughs at the affair, and as there are always some parties to encourage such persons, he considers himself quite a hero

Penn's Valley Items from the Reporter.—The venerable Christian Dale has a powder horn in his possession which his grandfather brought from Germany.

—We are informed that real estate has been assessed at a higher rate in Potter township than in any other district in the county, whereby the people of Potter are obliged to pay more taxes than their neighbors in the adjoining townships. This certainly is unjust, and is a matter which should be borne in mind by the assessors of Potter at the coming triennial assessment. Of course, the assessors of Potter township are to blame for this, and we wish to call the attention of the newly-elected ones to this matter. It is their duty to see that no undue burdens be placed upon our property holders in this respect, and the valuation of land should be lowered so as to correspond with that of adjoining townships.

—The first broad-wheel wagon was brought to Penn's Valley by the Hustons at an early day, before the turnpikes were made. It had, consequently, to be dragged across the Seven Mounteins by pieces. This wagon is still in the possession of Mr. Samuel Huston, near this place, and seems not yet to have served out its time, as we saw it at the blacksmith shop for repairs a short time ago.

—We have frequently referred to the rich ore deposits along the line of the L. C. & T. R. R., which have been discovered in Union county, in the mountains along Penn's creek, and through Penn's Valley. Some of this ore has been found to be very valuable, and the opening of the road will also open these mines of hidden wealth. To show that some of these ores are very rich in quality, we refer to one bank near Oak Hall, in Harris township, that has been opened, and ore, as Hon. Samuel Gilliland informs us, is wagoned from thence to Bellefonte, a distance of some eight miles; from the latter point it is shipped by rail to Muncy, whence it is taken across the river on flats, and then by wagon six miles to the furnaces. Now, ore that will bear all this expense of transportation and re shipment and then still be profitable to the furnace owners, must certainly be a mineral of more than ordinary value. The opening of our railroad will undoubtedly develop many treasures which now lie dormant under the surface, and only wait the roar and whistle of the locomotive to waken them up.

——The Murdoch Literary Society met at their hall on Friday evening last, to commemorate the birthday of Washington. Society was opened in the usual manner, after which several of the members made short addresses. The exercises were interspersed with singing by Messrs. McCafferty, Hibler and Humes, assisted by that gentleman of musical fame Mr. N. Beck, and accompanied on the organ by Mr. Herman Haupt. After these interesting exercises were concluded, the members and friends (about twenty in all,) seated themselves at a well spread table and partook of a feast prepared for the occasion. After toasts were drank to the health of the Assistant Burgess and several other modern celebrities, the society adjourned.

——Just eleven hours daylight to-day, said Mr. Keeper to his wife last evening at supper. Oh, I can easily notice that each to-morrow is longer than to day, said his wife poetically. Yes, just half a minute, calmly remarked the husband as he looked up from his almanac to admire the deepening flush on Mrs. Keeper's intelligent face.

Poetry.

WHICH?

The following tells its own story, and a beautiful one it is, too. It cannot fail to touch a father's or a mother's heart and make them appreciate the more their household darlings:

"Which shall it be? Which shall it be?
I looked at John, John looked at me,
(Dear patient John, who loves me yet,
As well as though my locks were jet,)
And when I found that I must speak,
My voice seemed strangely low and weak
"Tell me again what Robert said,"
And then I list'ning bent my head—
"This is his letter:"

"I will give
A house and land where you shall live
If, in return, from out your seven,
One child to me for aye is given."

I looked at John's old garments worn,
I thought of all that John had borne
Of poverty, and work and care,
Which I though willing, could not share.
I thought of seven mouths to feed,
Of seven little children's need,
And then of this.

"Come, John," said I
"We'll choose among them as they lie
Asleep;" so walking hand in hand
Dear John and I surveyed our band.
First to the cradle lightly stepped,
Where Lillian, the baby, slept,
A glory 'gainst the pillow white.
Softly her father stooped, to lay
His rough hand down its loving way,
When dream or whisper made her stir,
And huskily he said, "Not her—not her."
We stood beside the trundle bed,
And one long ray of lamplight shed
Athwart the boyish faces there,
In sleep so pitiful and fair;
I saw on Jamie's rough red cheek
A tear undried. Ere John could speak—
"He's but a baby, too," said I,
And kissed him as we hurried by.
Pale, patient Bobie's angel face
Still in his sleep bore suffering's trace.
"No, for a thousand crowns, not him;"
He whispered while our eyes were dim.
Poor Dick! bad Dick! our wayward son,
Turbulent, reckless, idle one—
Could he be spared? "Nay, He who gave
Bids us befriend him to the grave;
Only a mother's heart can be Patient enough for such as he.
"And so," said John, "I would not dare
To send him from her bedside prayer."
Then stole we softly up above,
And knelt by Mary child of love.
"Perhaps for her 'twould better be,"
I said to John. Quite solemnly
He lifted up a curl that lay
Across her cheek in a willful way,
And shook his head. "Nay, love, not thee,"
The while my heart beat audibly.
Only one more, our oldest lad,
Trusty, faithful, good and glad—
So like his father. "No, John, no—
I cannot, will not, let him go."
And so we wrote in courteous way,
We would not give one child away;
And afterward toil lighter seemed,
Thinking of that which we dreamed,
Happy, in truth, that no one face
We missed from its accustomed place;
Thankful to work for all the seven,
Trusting the rest to One in Heaven.

Our Story Teller.

TAKING IT FOR GRANTED.

With marks of a rough, stormy life all over him, a man about fifty years, gray and sunburnt, sat in my office. I found him there when I went in one morning not long ago.

'Here is somebody waiting for you, Elwell,' said Mr. Bigelow.

I looked around, and the man rose and held out his hand.

'Averill—my name is Averill,' said he, looking sharply at me out of a pair of shrewd gray eyes. 'I am an old friend of your mother's; but I have not met her for a matter of five-and-twenty years. So I thought I would call and ask after her and her family.'

'I am glad to see you,' said I. "Are you a relative of my mother?'

'No,' replied Mr. Averill. 'We were of the same name, but not connected—unless it may be very distantly. I used to know her and her folks, though as well as I did my own sisters, and better, too. Let's see—where is your Aunt Augusta now.'

"She is living with her children at Portland,' said I.

'Pretty well, is she, do you know?' asked Mr. Averill.

'Very well when we heard last. Aunt Augusta has good children and a pleasant home, and seems quite happy.'

'Um-m-m-m! That is nice,' said Mr. Averill, fumbling at a rough nugget of gold that hung as a charm from his watch-chain.

I hadn't much to do that day, so I talked off and on with my visitor till it was time to go home to dinner, and then took him along with me. I left him in the sitting-room and went to find mother. She was mixing biscuits for supper, looking through her glasses, and singing a snatch of some old, half-forgotten love-ditty of her youth.

'Mother!' said I, breaking upon her song. 'Come in the other room. An old friend of yours wants to see you.'

Mother looked over her glasses.

'An old friend. 'Tisn't any of the Maine folks, is it?' she asked.

Because, if it was so much as a dog that had trotted across a corner of the State of Maine, on his four legs, mother would have run, with her arms out and a smile without stopping to even wash the dough off her hands. As it was, with only an indefinite thought of seeing 'an old friend,' she went, with a dust of flour on her nose, and without her company cap.

As soon as she had stepped inside the sitting-room door she stood and looked at her guest and he stood and looked at her.

'It is Sam, as true as you are born!' she said, at last.

Then they both laughed, and then they both wiped their eyes, though they did not seem like that sort of people, especially Mr. Averill.

I never knew mother to forget her house-keeping before, but this time she let the biscuit burn till they were black as my shoe; and when she mixed some more she put in sugar instead of salt, and left out saleratus altogether. But her cheeks grew pink, and her cap strings flew, and she nor her guest seemed to know the difference.

'Oh, honey!' cried my mother, hopping up from the tea-table as soon as she was seated. 'You havn't lost your sweet tooth, have you, Sam?'

'How you do remember!' returned Sam, admiringly.

'I should think I ought to,' answered my mother with a girlish laugh. 'The way you used to pick up walnuts to carry to the cross-roads store and trade for molasses to make candy of! Speaking of the cross-roads store, I wonder if you know our old storekeeper's daughter, she that was Sarah Curly, has lost her husband?'

'No, has she? Strange I never heard of it,' replied Mr. Averill, appearing as astonished as though he had been hearing from his old neighbors every week.

'Yes,' said my mother. 'She married one of old Si Seaver's boys, the oldest one, Jonathan, and he died sudden,—all at once; well it must be something like half-a-dozen years ago,—and left his wife and so many children—five children or else six, I don't know which.'

'You don't say!' ejaculated Mr. Averill, passing his honey plate for the third time. No, evidently he had not lost his sweet tooth.

After supper, mother washed up the dishes and talked, and Mr. Averill smoked his pipe and listened. It was the first time I ever allowed anybody to smoke in my house, but I had nothing to say now. I even filled his pipe and lighted it for him. He was evidently a man who did not read much and who could not have written well, but he could talk; not always grammatically, perhaps but always with force and fascination.

It seemed that years and years ago, his father and my mother's father lived in a town in the valley of the Kennebec. My mother's father was a very large farmer and Mr. Averill's father was very small farmer with a very large family. So the youngest son, Sam, came to work for my grandfather. My mother and my Aunt Augusta were young girls—they were twins, and I suppose by the way they look now they must have been pretty then. My mother was early engaged and married to my father; but there was Augusta, and there was Sam; and where one was you might usually find the other near at hand. Sam never said anything, he was not of a demonstrative kind, but he knew how he felt, and he supposed Augusta knew too.

So the years budded and blossomed and brought forth fruit, until at last Sam went down to Connecticut to take charge of a sawmill for an uncle of his. He wrote to Aunt Augusta and Aunt Augusta wrote to him; and now and then he came to Maine on business, always going to my grandfather's before he went home, and carrying himself toward Augusta like an accepted lover.

After a few years he found himself possessed of twelve thousand dollars, and immediately went to work to spend it. He went abroad, to England and Rome and Egypt and Paris and to Germany and Sweden and Russia and everywhere. When he came home at last it was with only fifty dollars in his pocket. So next he went out among the copper mines of Lake Superior, and in time was again possessed of twelve thousand dollars.

'Now I will come home and marry Augusta, and settle down,' he said to himself. But he did not say it to anybody else. It never occurred to him that it was necessary.

Meantime my Aunt Augusta had not stood like a rose in a pot, waiting for a gardener to come and pick it. She cast out her roots and threw out her branches an bloomed as though it was enough to fulfill the laws of being and beauty for their own sakes.

In that simple neighborhood work was supposed to be the chief end of everybody. So Aunt Augusta learned vest-making, and then she went to Coos, where her brother Nathan lived, and set herself up.

Coos was a little crum of a town in those days; but it held up its head and had its stores and its mill, and its shops, and its great white meeting-houses on a hill, with galleries on three sides and square pews and high box pulpit.

The first Sunday after Aunt Augusta went there, she climbed the hill, of course, and went in the front pew with Uncle Nathan and his wife. She was fashionably dressed in a black gown, a scarlet shawl and a white silk bonnet with pink roses inside. Her cheeks were as pink as her roses, and her eyes were as black as her gown.

There was no need that Mr. Keeler should point her out to the young men, but he took pains to do is. Mr. Keeler, the minister, was a little lank man, as plain and gray as a dor-bug, and so afriad of the pomps and vanities that he wouldn't wear buttons on the coat. No sooner had his eyes fallen on Aunt Augusta, settling herself in the front seat like a variegated tulip, then he dropped the subject he had started upon for his sermon, and began to preach against conformity to the world. He was a sincere, earnest man, and he preached with all his might, emphasizing and illustrating his words by pointing with his blunt finger at the scarlet shawl and pink roses. So if anybody had neglected to look at them before, they looked now.

Among those who were obedient to the ministerial forefinger was Abner Stanton, the village blacksmith.

Abner Stanton's heart was a good deal like his iron—not easily melted—but when it once had been hammered into a shape, there it was, fixed and steadfast. And to-day Aunt Augusta's eyes went through it like red hot arrows as he peered around at her from behind one of the pillars in the gallery.

The next dey he came to get a vest made. The day after, he came to bring the buttons for it; and the day after that he thought, as he was going by, he would call and see if she had everything she needed, and how soon the vest would be done. It was not two days more before he was there again to bring a letter.

'I happened to see it at the post-office when I went after my paper, and so I brought it along. I could as well as not,' said he.

The letter was from Sam Averill, telling about the luck he had had in mining, the weather, and the fact that he was well. Nothing more; nothing about the home he was building in his fancy, and the figure that was always central in his thoughts.

'I hope,' said my Uncle Nathan, 'you are not foolish enough to set your mind on such a rolling stone as Sam Averill. He has no continuity to him.'

'If we are goin' to hunt for a man that has no faults in this world, we'll have a long road of it,' returned Aunt Augusta, bearing down the heavy pressing-iron upon her seam as though she were trying to crush the life out of something.

In less than a week Abner Stanton called again. He thought perhaps Miss Augusta didn't know the swamp-pinks were out, and so he brought her a handfull, that he got on the way over to Cowesett.

Aunt Augusta had a weakness for flowers—she and my mother are alike about that—and she put a cluster of the blossoms in her hair at once, and another at her throat, while Abner Stanton looked at her with admiration in every hair of his head.

'If you were a sister of mine, you should always sit in a rocking-chair and wear swamp-pinks!' said he.

'Abner Stanton is a most excellent man,' quoth Uncle Nathan, when he had gone his way, 'an esquire and a head man in town. He's all wheat and no chaff. He'll make a first rate husband; and the girl who gets him will get a prize.'

Aunt Augusta made some fierce clippings with her great tailor's shears, but she said nothing, and presently went up stairs to answer Sam Averill's letter.

The next day Abner Stanton called to see Uncle Nathan on business, and she sent her letter to the office by him. So the months drifted along one after another like pictures in a magic latern. Abner Stanton came often on one excuse or another, or on none. He brought flowers and berries strung on grass, and sweet flag-root and birds' eggs. He was never intrusive with his love, but he made Aunt Augusta conscious of it every step she walked and with every breath she breathed. It was below her, above her, and all around her. He often brought her letters from Sam and carried hers for him to the office.

'All things are fair in love,' said he to himself. So now and then he forgot to mail, or deliver one, dropping it in the fire instead. At last, as his love grew hotter and more impatient, he kept them back altogether, and still never allowed Aunt Augusta to lose sight or thought of himself.

Thus the time passed, until Sam Averill having made and lost and made again his twelve thousand dollars among the copper mines, came home to 'marry Augusta and settle down.'

Suddenly one day he appeared before my Uncle Nathan, travel-worn and brown and shaggy. My uncle received him with great cordiality.

'Sam, I'm glad to see you!' said he.—'How have you fared all this great long time?'

'Fair to middling. Where's Augusta?' returned Sam.

'Oh, Augusta! She is all right. You go to the tavern and fix up, and I'll find Augusta. I will be around in an hour or so and call for you. Augusta will be proper glad to see you, and so'll the rest of the folks. I don't know when there has been such a surprise in Coos before.'

So Sam went off with his honest heart to find a razor and a wash bowl, and my uncle Nathan did a very mean thing.—He went straight to Abner Stanton.—'Abner,' said he, going into the smithy, out of breath, 'Sam Averill has come, and you must go right up and get Augusta to name the day, or you will lose her. I'll keep him out of the way as long as I can.'

Abner dropped his hammer, without saying a word, and went up the street, rolling down his shirt sleeves as he went. An hour after Uncle Nathan came home with Sam Averill.

'Here is an old friend you will be glad to see, Augusta,' said he, opening the door of my aunt's workroom, where she sat stitching the pocket of primrose-colored vest, and looking fresh as a hundred primroses herself.

'It is Sam!' said she faintly and starting to her feet and dropping her work.

It was Sam. Sam come at last, with his long smoldering love and tardy speaking.

'You are too late! An hour too late!' said my aunt Augusta, when he had told his errand East. 'I have just engaged myself to another man.'

'You havn't done right, Augusta,' said Sam. 'You belong to me; you have always belonged to me, and you ought to have waited till I came.'

'You didn't say anything,' said my aunt, with a little pride. 'How was I to know what you meant? You never spoke a word.'

'I took it you knew my mind,' returned Sam. 'I never thought of anybody else. I never should think of anybody else, and it didn't occur to me that you would. You must marry this person now you have promised him, of course. But it isn't right and never will be right.'

'Mr. Stanton is a worthy man; just as good as gold, clear through to the core. I have always liked him, and you never said anything,' repeated my poor aunt Augusta. 'I will be your friend, though, just the same.'

They said no more; there was nothing more to be said, and in a month Aunt Augusta and Abner Stanton were married. Sam Averill stayed till after the wedding, and then he went off, and had never been heard of until to-day by Aunt Augusta's family.

He went to California, throwing his whole life into work; his work prospered, and he had come back now with houses and land and gold and mines—a rich man. He had come back to find Aunt Augusta, and learn how the world had fared with her. For in all these years of buying and selling and getting gain, he had kept the empty room in his heart that had once been filled by his love.

Aunt Augusta's married life had not been happy. It is very dangerous for a man to take in a mean habit temporarily, for it will stick to him, and Abner Stanton's character never recovered from the twist those intercepted letters gave it. I don't know what, but something was always going wrong between them. Even their children proved barriers instead of bonds. As he grew older his natural economy and thrift grew stronger and stronger, until, as my mother said, 'he got so clost he could sit and seven more like him, on a three-cent piece.' Finally, one day, under some provocation, he told Aunt Augusta about the lost letters. 'You oughtn't to have told me that Abner,' said she.—'You ought not to have told me. I can never forgive you.'

She never did. Always after there seemed to be something separating them, cold and hard and transparent as ice, until at last they agreed to live apart.—And so they did until the death of Mr. Stanton. Now Aunt Augusta was living surrounded by her children and grandchildren, happy and comfortable.

Mother brought down the story thus of Aunt Augusta's life, while Mr. Averill listened, eager and excited. When she had finished he knocked the ashes from his pipe, and starting up began to walk the floor.

'I will start for Portland to-morrow morning and see what Augusta has to say to me. I am of the same mind I always was. I've never hankered for a moment after any other woman, and I am as ready to marry her to-day as I ever I was.'

So the next day I saw him on the Portland train, gray with years but youthful with expectation.

This time he did not waste his opportunity by waiting to make himself fine, but with the grime and dust of travel yet upon him, he went directly to the house of Aunt Augusta's daughter, with whom she was living.

'Where is Mrs. Stanton? I want to see her right away,' said he, as soon as the door was opened.

'You will find her here; walk in, if you please,' replied the housemaid, throwing open the door of the sitting-room.

Mr. Averill stepped quickly forward. Yes, there she sat, stitching away as before on some kind of primrose stuff, with her eyes as black as ever. But the primroses were faded in her cheeks, and she wore a cap on her head.

'I have come for you again, Augusta. Am I too late this time?' cried the impatient lover.

The roses came back to Aunt Augusta's cheeks, and the red-hot arrows shot out of her eyes once more.

'Bless us! If it isn't Sam Averill, nose and all!' she said holding up her hands.

From twenty to fifty is but as a watch in the night, when the years are past; and it is only when the old lady nods triumpantly at you from the looking-glass, saying 'Here I am, my dear,' or when children you have nursed in your arms come around with the rights and duties of full grown men and women, that you remember one is no longer young at fifty. But the sight of Sam Averill's gray hair and wrinkles were as good as a looking-glass to remind Aunt Augusta.

'Sit down, Sam,' said she, 'and let me look at you. It seems like the real old times to see you once more. You look wonderful natural, but dear me, how you have changed! You've grown old as well as myself.'

But Mr. Averill was not to be diverted by any side issues.

'Augusta,' said he, earnestly, 'I made a serious mistake once. It was not a mistake about my own mind, however, that remains the same as it always was. Every woman I have ever seen seemed like a tallow candle beside the sun when I think of you. I have made my fortune, and all I want now is you to come and share it with me. It is you, or nobody just as it always was.'

Maybe Aunt Augusta's heart throbbed a little with the old yearning toward the love of her youth, but she shook her head with unhesitating decision, as she put out her hand to stir the cradle where her youngest grandchild lay asleep.

'It can never be, Sam,' said she. 'I won't deny that it was all a mistake my marrying Stanton. He didn't turn out to be the man I took him for. He proved contrary and onery, and beside he wrote letters in disguise. But that is all over and past, and can't be undone. And now I am in the midst of my children with my grandchildren growing up about me, and I am in my right place. I shouldn't be content to leave every thing and go off to a new country to begin the world over again, as it were. I am too old an oak to be transplanted.'

Well, after that Mr. Averill might have talked till he was at the age of Methuselah. Aunt Augusta had made up her mind and an earthquake couldn't shake it.

So Mr. Averill again went away alone.

'Well, Amelia, Augusta wouldn't have a word to say to me,' said he, walking in upon mother and me as we sat at supper a few evenings after, 'not a word.'

'I want to know if that is so!' cried mother, fluttering up after another plate and knife. 'Lay your overcoat right off and sit by and have a cup of tea with us. Augusta always was decided, and you couldn't turn her after she had got her mind fixed. She wouldn't keep you waiting long for your answer, either.—Well, it is likely it is for the best; we will hope so,' persued mother, reaching over to put an extra lump of sugar in Mr Averill's cup, as though to sweeten life if possible for him.

'It serves me right for taking it for granted that Augusta understood my intentions. I must have been a self-conceited, inconsiderate fool. But it seems hard that a body can't work his way out of a blunder in a whole life-time.

Mother looked full of sympathy, and dropped another lump of sugar in Mr Averill's cup. To my astonishment he seemed to relish it the better, as if life were growing sweeter and sweeter.'

Mother and Mr. Averill sat up late that night, so late that as I had had a hard day, I went off and left them talking over old times and purring like a couple of cats by the kitchen fire.

After breakfast the next morning, mother followed me into the hall when I started for the office.

'I want to speak with you, Elwell, just a minute,' said she stroking my coat sleeve, tremulously. 'What should you say to my going back to California along with Mr Averill?'

'You, mother!' I cried, feeling as though the world had tumbled off its axis. 'Why, it is Aunt Augusta he wants. 'It's Aunt Augusta or nobody!'

'Yes, so it was,' returned mother, humbly, 'but Sam says I seem more like Augusta, as she used to be, than she does herself. To tell you the truth, Elwell,' continued mother, humbler still, 'I suppose it wouldn't have taken much to turn me toward Sam in my young days; I always thought the world and all of him; but he seemed to take rather more to Augusta. She was always nineteen to the dozen, and I never could hold my own against her. And then your father, he came along, and I never was sorry it happened as it did, but now you don't need me, and Sam and I have concluded to make arrangements, only I told him I must have a talk with you first and get your advice.'

Get my advice! Dear little mother. I was not idiotic enough to offer it if I had any advice to give. So she and Mr Averill went on and made arrangements.

When arrangements were made that day two weeks, after a quiet wedding at the minister's, they started off for California together, to begin life anew on each other's account, as blithe and joyous as two birds on the wing.

As soon as the Congressional chaplain closes his appeal to the Throne of Grace there is a clapping of hands all over the floor. It is the way members have of calling pages to their side. Every Congressman begins his day's labor by giving an order to a messenger; hence the clapping is universal and uproarious.—'Well, that beats me,' said an elderly man in the gallery, with mud on his boots, which looked as though it had been brought from the other side of the Potomac; 'I don't see anything in that prayer worth cheering.'

WHY is a man who never lays a wager, quite as bad as one who does?—Because he is no better.

What shall we do with our Daughters.

Apropos of what Mrs. Livermore's lecture on the above important question says, the Devenport Democrat thus sensibly makes answer:

Teach them self-reliance.
Teach them to make bread.
Teach them to make shirts.
Teach them to foot up store bills.
Teach them not to paint or powder.
Teach them to wear safe, thick, warm shoes.
Teach them how to wash and iron clothes.
Bring them up in the way they should go.
Teach them to make their own dresses.
Teach them that a dollar is only a hundred cents.
Teach them how to cook a good meal of victuals.
Teach them every day dry, hard, practical common sense.
Teach them how to darn stockings and sew on buttons.
Give them a good substantial common school education.
Teach them to say no and mean it; or yes, and stick to it.
Teach them to regard the morals and not money of beaux.
Teach them to wear calico dresses—and to do it like a queen.
Teach them all the mysteries of the kitchen, the dining-room and the parlor.
Teach them that a good rosy romp is worth fifty consumptives.
Teach them to have nothing to do with intemperate and dissolute young men.
Teach them the more one lives within his income, the more they will save.
Teach them the further one lives beyond his income, the nearer they get to the poor-house.
Rely upon it that upon your teaching depends in a great measure the weal or woe of their after life.
Teach them the accomplishments—music, painting and drawing—if you have time and money to do it with.
Teach them to cultivate a garden and drive a farm wagon.
Teach them that God made them in his own image, and no amount of tight lacing will improve the model.
Teach them that a good steady mechanic without a cent, is worth a dozen oil-patent loafers in broadcloth.
Teach them the essentials of life—truth, honesty, uprightness—and at a suitable age let them marry.

The President's Grave.

Though we have not heard as we write, we presume that Mr. Linoln's family have decided that his remains shall rest by their Illinois home, that city which was the cradle of his greatness and the arena of his earlier efforts as a lawyer and legislator. Fifty months have passed since he left it, in the pride of manly vigor and strength, to enter upon that career as President which will permanently fill a bright and memorable page in the world's history; he returns to it a bleeding corpse, surrounded by his stricken family and by a tearful, adoring people. The following words of farewell to his neighbors, on leaving them, Feb. 11, 1861, have now a fresh and mournful interest:

MY FRIENDS:—No one not in my position can appreciate the sadness I feel at this parting. To this people I owe all that I am. Here I have lived more than a quarter of a century; here my children were born, and here one of them lies buried. I know not how soon I shall see you again. A duty devolves upon me which is, perhaps, greater than that which has devolved upon any other man since the days of Washington. He never would have succeeded except for the aid of Divine Providence, upon which he at all times relied. I feel that I cannot succeed without the same Divine aid which sustained him, and on the same Almighty Being I place my reliance for support; and I hope you, my friends, will pray that I may receive that Divine assistance, without which I cannot succeed, but with which, success is certain. Again I bid you all an affectionate farewell.—Tribune, April 1865.

THE following beautiful extract is culled from an editorial in an unreconstructed sheet down South:

"Oh, for the wings of a dove, a wild goose, or a buzzard, that we might fly away and be at rest among the Feejees, Hottentots, or some other better and nobler race than our own braggadocious-enlightened barbarians! Oh, that we might trade off our mulatto strumpet goddess of liberty for the Queen of the Cannibal Islands! Oh, for a roosting place among the Kickapoos, Carlos, or New Zealanders — pagans who have never yet wallowed in the mire of the Credit-Mob o'-Liar robbers and custom house frauds, or sounded the fathomlessly infamous depths of presidential despotic cormorancy, office-peddling and universal deadbeatry! * * Oh, for a dwelling on Patagonia's frigid shores! Oh, for a lodge amid the sunscorched blackamoors of the Nigar and Zembesi!"

And Oh, for a double-barreled gun to shoot the howling idiot!

Lady Loafers.

Two or three hundred wives of the rich men of New York are engaged in devising some relief from the oppression and misery of idleness incident to lives of rich women. Among these ladies are the names of the most prominently wealthy of New York. At a meeting held for religious devotions and consultation the other morning in the Broadway Tabernacle, the wife of a millionaire said she had more comfort after a day of activity in the duties of life than she could realize in any other employment. Request by mothers for prayers for their rich, reckless sons drew tears all over the room. One rich woman said when we rejoice with those who rejoice, and weep with those who weep, 'we cheat ourselves out of our own sorrow.'

Another woman said the only way to keep anything is to give it. Another said that flannel, unbleached cotton, thread and needles were the best remedies for the restlessness of rich women. Among these women are the wives of railway kings, stock gamblers, good Christians, and big sinners. That some panacea should be found for the miseries of rich women no one can doubt. Such women become so lazy, so indolent, so indisposed to exertion that even the relief of doing charity is denied them, and the consequence is that they spend their time either in lolling their lives away, or in dressing three times a day, or in lamenting the fate of their money-cursed children, while many take up the Bible prayer, 'Give me neither poverty or riches.'

WHERE THE SUN DOES NOT SET.—A scene witnessed by some travelers in the North of Norway, from a cliff one thousand feet above the sea, is thus described: 'The ocean stretched away in silent vastness at our feet; the sound of waves scarcely reached our airy lookout; away in the North the huge old sun swung low along horizon, like the slow beat of the pendulum in the tall clock of our grandfather's parlor corner. We all stood silent, looking at our watches. When both hands came together at twelve, midnight, the full round orb hung triumphantly above the waves, a bridge of gold running due North spanning the water between us and him. There he shone in silent majesty, which knew no setting. We involuntarily took off our hats; no word was said. Combine, if you can, the most brilliant sunrise and sunset you ever saw and the beauties will pale before the gorgeous coloring which now lit up ocean, heaven and mountain. In half an hour the sun had swung up perceptibly on his beat, the colors changed to those of morning, a fresh breeze rippled over the flood, one songster after another piped up in the grove behind us—we had slid another day.

A COLORED man applied to a Boston savings bank, wishing to draw one dollar. The clerk informed him that the iron rule of the institution forbid the withdrawal of less than three dollars.—Our colored brother was in a deep study for a few moments, and then said: 'Sar, I'll take de free dollars.' The three dollars were paid to him, when he at once added: 'Now, sar, if yer please, sar, I'll 'poset two dollars in de institution.' The amount was duly received and credited, when, with his loose dollar in his pocket, he gave the clerk a sly wink, and walked away.

A YOUNG man in Detroit, who was married about six months ago, was recently finding fault with the prices at the market. He said he could not understand how it was, for they used to figure it out as he set with his arm around her waist on Sunday nights, that all it would cost them to live was $2.75 a week and now he spent $15 and was hungry half the time.

'BREVITY is the soul of wit.' A New Hampshire lecture committee recently wrote to Boston to learn what Mrs. Scott-Siddons would read for. The reply was '$300 and expenses; answer, as Mrs. Siddons will sail for Europe at once if you don't want her.' 'Let her sail,' was the epigrammatic answer.

Fashions.

—The double-breasted French waist is a particularly useful design for school or for morning home wear for girls. It is effective in woolen or linen, with cuffs, collar, and buttons of a different color and material from the rest of the bodice. Dark blue, piped with white, brown, or gray is a good combination in linen; pink on black in woolen goods on buff; or white for dinner and evening wear at home.

—The straight jacket cut with rather long, square tabs, is one the prettiest garments for spring wear, and not requiring any tournure or drapery, for girls from five to ten, sits well over Gabrielle dresses, which thus only need three narrow bands or ruffles, placed a short distance apart, to be complete.

—Ladies in warm climates who already need cooler clothing, will find gray linen Gabrielle, looped up and belted in with black, over a black alpaca (unlined) a useful and pleasant ordinary costume, for in or out door wear, especially in country neighborhoods.

—Handkerchiefs for day wear are of plain white, or ecre batiste' deeply bordered with a color, dark blue, violet, or mauve; for receptions they are of fine linned cambric, daintily embroidered, and bordered with a ruffling of the cambric, with a needlework edge, or with lace. Lace handkerchiefs are reserve for evening parties and entertainments. Of course.

Iron in the Blood
PERUVIAN AN IRON TONIC SYRUP
MAKES THE WEAK STRONG.
The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.
This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low state of the system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form, its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building up an Iron Constitution.
Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.
See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

FOR FROSTED LIMBS, COSMOLINE is fully as efficacious as for burns and scalds, restoring a healthy action to the injured parts very quickly. It is also the best possible remedy for Chilblains and Chapped Hands.

HAPPIEST RELIEF.
☞ ON CUTS AND BRUISES, the action of COSMOLINE is almost magical. If promptly applied, it prevents soreness, and the wounds heal very rapidly.

FOR SKIN DISEASES we can recommend it with the greatest confidence, especially for Salt Rheum, Tetter, Eczema etc., and Teething humours.
We might go on enumerating the many other conditions for which it is unequalled, but will only add that wherever there is inflammation from any cause, COSMOLINE brings a rapid and happy relief, and will be the

ELAINE
AS AN ILLUMINATOR.
WHY IT IS THE SAFEST.
ELAINE will not explode while burning in a lamp, nor in any other way, as it does not contain any of the explosive compounds so frequently met with in the ordinary oil for illuminating. A lamp, filled with ELAINE, if upset or accidently broken, will not explode or burn. There is no position in which you can put a lamp filled with ELAINE, for common use, in which it will explode. As no other illuminator has such advantages of safety, ELAINE IS CERTAINLY THE SAFEST FAMILY ILLUMINATING OIL KNOWN.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.
The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.
Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.
No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.
Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.
Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.
Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.
Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.
For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.
Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.
For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ringworms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.
Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.
For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.
Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

ON THE WING—NO. 12.

The Lost Girl of Wyoming.

It has been said that "history is sometimes stranger than fiction." The incident to which the above caption refers presents one of the strange events so common in the early struggles of our ancestors with savage life. This event carries our minds back to the early history of one of the most beautiful valleys in the world. The great Apalachian chain of mountains crosses our great state, dividing itself up into many local ranges, under which lies the wealth of an empire and between which lie many beautiful valleys, among which is the long, narrow valley of Wyoming, famous in story and in song, and not less noted in modern days for its agricultural and mineral wealth. The Susquehanna pours down from the North, its rugged course battling with mountain barriers until it enters this lovely valley, and then, as if beguiled by the beauty of the scenery, it seems to linger in its course, and glide quietly and placidly through the smiling fields of Wyoming valley. The stranger who stands on Prospect hill, sees the beautiful valley as a whole, and his soul is filled with delight as he gazes upon the beautiful landscape spread out before him, one of Nature's grandest pictures. There is scarcely a spot in the State that has been the scene of so much bloodshed, pain and agony, as this beautiful garden. No one can pass through this region without calling up the incidents which have made "Wyoming" a household word. The first great battle of which historians speak was caused by a dispute "concerning the ownership of a large grasshopper, caught by one child and claimed by another." The women sympathized with their chileren, and the husbands with their wives; the Shawnees and Delawares, two warlike tribes of Indians, entered into the deadly strife. "A sanguinary conflict ensued, in which, after great slaughter, the Shawnees were defeated and expelled from the valley." Many long and bloody wars have arisen in civilized life from casuses as trivial as the one just noticed. We can hardly afford to laugh at the savages for fighting so bravely over the title to an insect, when we see Napoleon driven from his throne and his empire crushed from a cause almost as unimportant.

The cause of the battles that follow arose from counter claims well defined. In 1620 King James I. granted to the Plymouth company a charter for the governing of New England, in America. This charter covered the territory from the 40th to the 46th parallel of North latitude. On the restora- of Charles II., in 1662, he granted a new charter to the people of Connecticut, confirming the previous charter, but fixing the Southern boundary at 41 South latitude. The same king granted the memorable charter of Pennsylvania to William Penn, fixing the Northern boundary at 42 North latitude. There, then was a strip of land including Northern Pennsylvania claimed by Connecticut and Pennsylvania, and each by a royal charter from the monarch, the Puritans having the priority of right. The next step was to obtain the title from the Indians. At a general congress of commissioners from all the English American colonies at Albany, N. Y., 1755, the representatives of Connecticut appeared, having obtained a deed of the lands upon the Susquehanna, including Wyoming, and west to the waters of the Allegheny, felt now their title was secure. Fourteen years afterwards the proprietors of Pennsylvania procured a title from the "six nations" to all the lands in the province of Pennsylvania. This deed covered all the lands which the people of Connecticut had purchased from the same chiefs. The Legislature of Connecticut took measures to settle and defend the valley, and the Legislature of Pennsylvania did the same. This is the cause which made Wyoming the scene of blood for so many years. For six years a fierce war raged, and bravery, and heroism and devotion were exhibited which would have shone with equal lustre at Marathon or Gettysburg. Through fire and smoke and blood, the sturdy Round Head held his ground against the peaceful Quaker, and the blood of Connecticut still flows amid the sunny fields of this now happy valley. Forts were built, defended and stormed; homes were burned; the tomahawk and rifle did the work of blood. The spirit of '76 stilled this local strife, and these modern Spartans started to the front to fight for a common country. Wyoming would be made dearer by being the part of a free nation. The brave people were among the first to start. As early as August 1, 1775, it was voted, at a town meeting, "That we will unanimously join our brethren of America in the common cause of defending our liberty." A year later the town voted, "that the people be called upon to work upon ye forts without fee or reward from ye said town." This noble spirit of devotion to country had sent nearly every able-bodied man to the army, and left Wyoming to the mercy of Tory and savage. The Tory now sought revenge on a community that could show such devotion to liberty. In June, 1778, British, Tories and Indians to the number of 1,100, poured down upon the defenseless valley where dwelt the women and children whose husbands and fathers were in the army with Washington. Opposed to these were 400 men and boys, who fought with courage that had distinguished the Wyoming boys. The victors showed little mercy to the captives, and many were murdered in cold blood. In the spring of 1779 a party of Indians came down on the settlements of Wyoming, burning and plundering in their usual style. It was at this time that Frances Slocum was captured. The men of the Slocum family were away in the field at work. when suddenly their home was surrounded by Indians. The mother and family of children were in the house. Among the children was a little girl named Frances, whom one of the Indians took across his shoulders after they had done their cruel work, and started for the forest. Frances was five years old. The mother's heart was wrung with anguish as she heard the cries of her child and saw her struggles in the hands of her savage captor. The Indian disappeared in the forest, the cries of the child were lost in the distance, and the mother had looked for the last time upon the face of her little one. This sad incident threw a cloud over the remainder of her life. Many were the earnest prayers of the mother for the return of her child. Many weary hours were spent by the family in talking over the probable fate of Frances. Did the Indians kill her? Are they kind to her? Will she ever return? Such questions a thousand times rose to the mother's lips. But she went to her grave without an answer. There were two brothers and a sister left. And when the little boys became men they had all the anxiety of a brother's heart to know the fate of their little sister. They wrote letters, made inquiries, took long journeys into the west and the Canadas, but a silence as deep and impenetrable as the grave hung over her fate. The search was considered hopeless, and all efforts to find the lost one were relinquished. The brothers mourned for her as dead, though there was no toil they would not have endured to bring her back to her home again, and have her roam with them on the banks of the beautiful river. In Indiana, about fifty miles southwest of Fort Wayne, was an Indian cabin in 1838. The squaw who ruled the mansion and made a happy home for her savage lord was a woman of more than sixty summers. Her hair is not dark, and a good observer would suppose there was no Indian blood in her veins. Her heart had been won; she had married; her first husband had died; she had married a second; had raised a family of children; she had sons married and settled in life. The family was blessed with abundance for Indian life. The lady of this mansion is dressed in the skins of wild animals; has horses at her command, and handles them with the dexterity of her savage state. She had the habits of the Indian, and only the keen observer would suppose there was any doubt about the race to which she belonged. About this time Hon. George W. Ewing, agent of the United States, is traveling in the region. Overtaken by the setting sun, his horse and himself weary, he stops at this wigwam for the night. The hospitality of savage life made the traveler feel at home. He speaks the Indian tongue. The hours of evening are whiled away by Indian talk of wild adventures, narrow escapes, success in the chase. During the evening the traveller discovers the skin under the squaw's dress is white. This led to a different conversation. She told him she was a white child. She remembered that her name was Slocum. That she lived on the banks of the Susquehanna. She told the number of children in her father's family and the order of their ages. The wild romance deeply interested Mr. Ewing, who made the matter known. The news came to the ears of the brother who was two and a half years old when his sister was stolen. Though over sixty years of age, and his brother nearer seventy, they are soon on their way for the fourth time to seek the face of a sister they had not seen for sixty years. How strong are those family ties that can stretch their silken chords through a period of sixty years without weakening the sweetness of their vibrations. The hearts of these affectionate ones were sustained by hope as they rode on through the dark forests of Indiana in quest of the lost one. "I shall know my sister," said the sister to her brother, "for she lost a nail off of her little finger; you, brother, hammered it off in the blacksmith shop when she was four years old." Nine miles from the nearest white settler they find the cabin. They enter. An old woman is sitting there apparently "seventy-five years old." No time was lost in ascertaining who it was who sat before them. She tells them where she was born. She tells them the order of her father's family. "How came your nail gone?" "My older brother pounded it off in the shop." The recognition was complete. Here sat the long lost Frances, the squaw of an Indian, and as much a heathen as her savage lord. Here was a subject for a painter. The brothers were walking the cabin unable to speak. The oldest sister was weeping, shedding tears of mingled joy and grief. But the Indian sister sat motionless and passionless, exhibiting all the indifference of her Indian life. All the finest feelings of her nature had been blasted in her soul. Her fount of tears seemed dried. The warm exhibitions of fraternal affection which moved her brothers and sisters awoke no echo in her heart. She had become an Indian, she knew not the days of the week; knew nothing of the Sabbath; did not known her own age. This child of Puritan civilization had become a child of the forest. The brothers and sister used all their powers of persuasion to induce her to return to Wyoming, the banks of the smiling river, but they failed to touch her feelings. She died as she had lived—an Indian.

ALHHA.

Great Men.

We always think of great men as in the act of performing the deeds which give them renown, or else in stately repose, grand, and majestic. And yet this is hardly fair, because even the most gorgeous and magnificent of human beings have to bother themselves with the little things of life which engage the attention of us smaller people. No doubt Moses suffered and got angry when he had a severe cold in the head and if a fly bit his leg while he was sitting in the desert, why should we suppose he did not jump and use violent language and rub the sore place? And Cæsar—isn't it tolerably certain that he used to become furious when he went up stairs to get his slippers in the dark and found that Caluphurnia had shoved them back under the bed so that he had to sweep around wildly for them with a broom handle? And when Solomon cracked his crazy bone, is it unreasonable to suppose that he hopped around the room and looked mad, and felt as if he wanted to cry? Imagine Geo. Washington sitting on the edge of the bed putting on a clean shirt and grumbling at Martha because the buttons were off; or at St. Agustine with an apron around his neck having his hair cut; Joan of Arc holding her front hair in her mouth, as women do, while she fixed up her back hair; or Napoleon jumping out of bed in a frenzy to chase a muspuito around the room with a pillow; or Martin Luther in his night shirt trying to put the baby to sleep at 2 o'clock in the morning; or Alexander the Great with the hiccups; or Thomas Jefferson getting suddenly over a fence to avoid a dog; or the Duke of Wellington lying in bed with the mumps; or Daniel Webster abusing his wife because she had not tucked the covers in at the foot of the bed; or Benjamin Franklin paring his corn with a razor; or Jonathan Edwards at the dinner table wanting to sneeze just as he fills his mouth full of beef or Noah standing at his window throwing bricks at a cat. Great men are mortal, and are subject to and affected by many of the annoyances that afflict the common men of humanity. Hence the French proverb. That no man is great to his valet

EDITOR'S TABLE.

—The Republic published by the Republic Puplishing Company of Washington, D. C., is one of the most valuable magizines that comes to our table. Ever since it was started, now over a year, it has been a constant visitor to us, and we only do it justice when we say that it is ever welcome and from its pages we have gleaned much valuable information which we could not, without much difficulty, have obtained from any other source. It is devoted to the dissemination of political information, and should be in the hands of every person who desires to be well posted in matters of that character, and what American citizen does not desire such information? Every one certainly should, in a free republic where every man is sovereign, with the sovereign power of a free man, seek such information as will qualify him for the responsible duties of a free American citizen. The subjects treated in the February number are: The Opinions of the Country Press; The Mission of True Statesmanship, and the proper solution of the economic problem of Cheap Transportation; The Annexation of Canada; Capital, Labor and Wages; The Work of the Treasury Department; The question of Specie Payment, and the Postal Telegraph.

All these questions are ably handled from a non-partisan stand-point, and in an attractive and instructive manner. It is made clear to the reader that the writers for The Republic are thoroughly informed, and that their leading purpose is to promote the prosperity of our people and insure the perpetuity of our institutions. The appendix contains the able speeches of Senators Chandler and Logan, and Representatives H. S. Bundy on "The Finances," and R. H. Cain on "Civil Rights."

We say again that every citizen who takes an interest in public affairs should possess and read this magazine, and that no family should be without it.

The terms are $2.00 a year payable in advance.

—The next visitor which claims our attention is of a different character altogether, but still indispensible to Manufacturies, Mechanics, Builders, Inventors, Engineers and Architects, and it is called The Technologist or Industrial Monthly—a longer name than there is any occasion for but filled full with good, instructive reading. No person who belongs to either of the above named classes would regret or be one cent poorer for paying $1,50 a year for this truly valuable work. The present number, which is the February number, has many beautiful cuts and illustrations including one full page illustration of the new Post Office building now just completed at Boston, Mass. This magazine is sold by all news dealers or can be subscribed for by addressing the Industrial Publication Company, 176 Broadway, New York.

—We are not much of a "slugist" but if J. L. Peters continues to send us his valuable monthly, and sheet music, we shall have to learn to do, re, la, sol, mo. fa, sol, la. re, do, sol, do. There, that is as far as we can get. We let our daughters do the singing, and they are very much pleased with Peter's Musical Monthly. We have the March number now before us. It starts out with a song and chorus entitled "Send for Mother," followed by a serenade "Norah is Dreaming of you," then song and chorus "Darling I shall ever Love," which touches our hearts tenderly and causes us to wish we were a boy. The title of the subsequent pieces are "Those Eyes," "Watching," "Musical Echoes," "Lottie's Waltz," "Pure as "Gold" and "Angel visits." We advise our f[illegible] to invest $3,00 with J. L. Peters, No. 599 Broadway, New York, and be happy for a year.

St. Nicholas' Scribner's Illustrated Magazine, for boys and girls, conducted by Mary Mapes Dodge, and published by Scribner & Co., 654 Broadway, New York, is at hand for March. This is one of the most interesting books for children published in this country or any other for that matter. We copy a little extract from it to show how it tries to amuse and at the same time instruct its young readers.

MRS FASHIONS.—Do you know that some of the most striking fashions of the ladies were at first worn by gentlemen? A raven friend of mine, who spent three years in a baron's library, and ought to know, says that muffs were originally carried by gentlemen; also that hoops under the skirt were first worn by them. He says the encyclopedias all say so. Look it up, little girls. My friend Raven may be mistaken, but I'm afraid he is right.

—The March number of Old and New has some good story reading, some striking poetry, and some reasonable and instructive papers on social subjects. Although "Scrope" is omitted for this number, Mr. Trollope's novel proceeds as usual; the lively three-part Washington novelette is concluded; and there is a very bright California sketch by H. A. Berton, called "The Quickledge Partners." Biography is also pretty strong in this number, their being a curious account of Thomas Muir, who was a victim of the British sedition laws about the time of the French Revolution; a sketch of Miss Mary Somerville, the famous lady mathematician, and another of the late Dr. John Warren. Of the three poems, one is a sententious translation from Ruckert, by Rev. C. T Brooks; one is a gloomy but striking meditation among the tombs at New Orleans, by Joseph M. Field, father of the well-known lively newspaper lady, Miss Kate Field, and the third is an imaginative and thoughtful picture of the Athenian "Winged Victory" and its meaning. The strongest department of the number is its social science, however. Under this head, comes a paper on Labor Organization, with a plan for running a factory on co-operative principles; another of Mr. Quincy's acute papers on charity tax-exemption; and more especially an instructive paper on the U. S. Law, so-called, and its efficiency in protecting our merchant seamen sailor landlords. Under this head also comes a sensible recommendation, by Mr. Hale in the Introduction, that it should be made the regular business of the churches to conduct, each in its own district, the "out-door poor relief" business. Some of the minor papers in the "Examiner" and Record of Progress" belong under the same head, particularly two intelligent and strongly written reviews, one by a man and one by a woman, of Dr. Clarke's remarkable book, "Sex in Education." Altogether, this is an unusually valuable number of the magazine.

Published by Roberts Bros., Boston. Per year, $4.00.

—And still they come; Chas. A. Atkinson & Co., 23 Liberty Street, New York, sends us a musical journal, called The Globe. We say musical, perhaps it would be more to the point to say that it is devoted to Music, Drama, Literature and Art, for unlike the musical book spoken of above it is not devoted to music, but has some very interesting reading matter, also a fine full page portrait of Parepa Rose. The number before us is the first number we have ever seen. If they continue to send it we will give it a careful examination and perhaps a more extended notice, provided we think it worthy the patronage of our readers. Judging from the present number we should say that if it is always as good, that after having once seen it a person could hardly be happy until he had invested $1.50 in the Globe.

STATE ITEMS.

—Lancaster jour printers are on a strike.

—Reading spent over $60,000 on her streets last week.

—There are now twenty-five gas wells in operations in Erie.

—The Parker and Karns City Railroad was opened on Thursday.

—Gas cost three dollars per thousand feet in Clearfield.

—A new Methodist Episcopal church will be dedicated in Manch Chunk on March 22.

—Mr. John B. Heckman of Gregg township, raised nine hundred and twenty-three bushels of wheat from thirty-two acres of ground last year, or an average of nearly twenty-nine bushels to the acre.

—A sad and fatal accident occured at Mertztown, Berks county, on the 10th inst. While several men were engaged at work in the limestone quarries of the Emaus Iron Company, at Mertztown, a sand blast which they were making exploded permaturely killing Andrew Botz and Amandus Smith, and wounding three or four other persons.

WITHIN THE WHOLE RANGE of tonic and alterative medicines known, none is entitled to more consideration than the Peruvain Syrup. In all cases of enfeebled or debilitated constitution it is the remedy needed. The most positive proof of this can adduced.

It is impossible to fix a price upon seed without seeing it. Farmers will please remember this and bring their seed along with them when they want to sell. If you fail to do this, although you may have the best of seed, you may get only the price paid for an inferior quality. Bring along your seed and we will pay you the highest market price.

Agricultural.

☞ NOTE.—We earnestly desire that this department of our paper shall be made as useful as possible to our Agricultural friends, and therefore extend a cordial invitation to all parties interested, to favor us with contributions. Individuals who have made useful experiments and yet do not feel competent to write them out in form for publication, if they will favor us with the results we will take pleasure in putting them in proper shape.

A Handy Device for Teamsters.

As a general thing in the winter our country roads become well blocked with snow and mud, rendering the hauling of heavy machinery, wood, stone, or other large loads, no small burden upon ordinary teams. A great deal of labor and hard tugging may be saved if every wagon or truck is provided with 100 feet of stout rope and a single pulley. A snatch block is the best arranged with a strong hook, and the usual construction for slipping the tight of the rope under the strap to the sheave instead of waiting to reeve the line through on end. If a wagon gets stuck in heavy mud or in the snow, the driver has only to fasten his block to the tongue, reeve the rope through it, and attach one end to a tree or post and let his team pull on the other. Their work is of course just halved, or rather they bring twice as much power to bear in dragging the wagon clear. There are plenty of other applications of this simple device, which will readily suggest themselves. With a couple of skids for an inclined plane, heavy logs could be easily drawn on a sleigh by the unhiched team. Another case where it is likely to be useful is when loaded sleighs attempt to cross a wooden bridge. Although the horses draw the load very easily over the snow, they are often unable to start it over the generally denuded wooden flooring of the bridge, and hence would be materially aided by the tackle hitched on as we have described.

Large or Small Farms.

In discussing the comparitive benefits and profits of large farms, we must not lose sight of the old maxim, "Little land well tilled." Theoretically, a large farm should be more profitable than a small one; but practically, is not the reverse nearer the truth? The true test is the profit per acre. Do large farms yield as large a profit per acre as smaller ones? Small farms give their owners opportunity of concentrating labor and manure into a more profitable form, and the owner can have a more direct oversight of his laboring force. The main argument in favor of large farms is, that the expense per acre for implements is less, and this must be conceded. It requires but little more machinery for three hundred acres than for one, and the only increase is in very inexpensive implements for working the crops. On a small farm the labor of the owner is much more available than on a larger one, though in the latter case it may be claimed that his brains are of more use than his hands.

We think that many of our farmers who now own three hundred acres, would be much better off at the end of the year if their energies and labor had been concentrated upon one-third of the land. The manure and labor expended on thirty acres of land, would have given better crops and more profit in proportion if it had been expended on ten. In fact, we think this strong desire of our American farmers, as a class, to possess large areas of land, is one of the worst features of our agricultural system.

How to Dress a Sheep.

First, kill the animal, then, as life is extinct, skin the hind legs up to the hamstrings; then gambrel and hoist it up; make an incision, high up in the belly, about an inch and a half in length; then insert the stem of a large funnel into the incision, and pour into it from one to two gallons of cool water, the colder the better. The application of cold water cools the intestines and the inside of the sheep, and at the same time, fills the chamber and passes between the intestines and the flesh, thereby preventing any contact of the parts and at the same time coolling every part completely. It also drives out the gases of the incision, so that there is no possibility of the meat becoming affected in any reasonable length of time, which gives the operator time to dress the meat properly. This is done by ripping from bough to bough, skinning downward without further ripping, thereby preventing the wool or any outside filth from coming in contact with the flesh. This, of course, I do as quickly as possible Then remove the intestines carefully, so as not to break any of them. By this mode of treatment you will find the tallow on the intestines and on the inside of the animal, perfectly cool and rigid.

Fattening Chickens.

It is hopeless to attempt to fatten chickens while they are at liberty. They must be put in a proper coop; and this, like most other poultry appurtenances, need not be expensive. To fatten twelve fowls, a coop may be three feet long, eighteen inches high, and eighteen inches deep, made entirely of bars. No part solid—neither top, side or bottom. Discretion must be used, according to the size of the chickens put up. They do not want room; indeed the closer they are the better—provided they can all stand up at the same time. Care must be taken to put up such as have been accustomed to be together, or they will fight. If one is quarrelsome, it is better to remove it at once, as, like other bad examples. A diseased chicken should not be put up. The food should be ground oats; and may either be put in a trough or on a flat board running along the front of the coop. It may be mixed with water or milk, the latter is the better. It should be well soaked, forming a palp as loose as can be, provided it does not run off the board. They must be well fed three or four times a day—the first time as soon after daybreak as may be possible or convenient, and then at intervals of four hours. Each meal should be as much and no more than they can eat up clean. When they have done feeding, the board should be wiped, and some gravel may be spread. It causes them to feed and thrive. After a fortnight of this treatment, you will have good, fat fowls. If, however, there are five or six to be fattened, they must not have as much room as though there were twelve. Nothing is easier than to allow them the proper space, as it is only necessary to have two or three pieces of wood to pass between the bars and form a partition. This may also serve when fowls are put up at different degrees of fatness. This requires attention, or fowls will not keep fat and healthy. As soon as the fowl is sufficiently fatted it must be killed, otherwise it will not get fatter, but will lose flesh. If fowls are intended for the market, of course they are or may be all fatted at once, but if for home consumption it is better to put them up at such intervals as will suit the time when they will be required for the table.

'I am sensible that it is round,' quoth Tom, 'and I have come for the purpose of having it squared.'

Rev. Gent—"But you really can have no serious reason to wish to be parted from your wife."

Rustic—"Well, no sir. I like my wife well enough, but you see, she don't please my mother."

A Western paper speaks of the house-cleaning season as that when divine women has her own way at the house, while the "old man" takes his solemn repast from the top of a flour barrel, and, in sleeping, enjoys the freedom of the interval between his bedroom and the front fence. It is a season of meditation, whitewash and calm unimpassioned profanity.

Getting Rid of False Friends.—"I weeded my friends," said an old eccentric friend, "by hanging a piece of stair carpet out of my first floor window, with a broker's announcement affixed. Gad! it had the desired effect. I soon saw who were my friends. It was like firing a gun near a pigeon house: they all forsook the building at the first report, and I have not had occasion to use the extra flaps of my dining table since.

An exchange paper relates, in very touching verse, the opposite fates of two early friends; the little tale is old, but has a great moral:

One took a paper, and his life
Was happier than a king's—
His children all could read and write,
And talk of men and things.

The other took no paper, and,
While strolling through the wood,
A tree fell down, upon his crown,
And killed him—as it should.

Had he been reading of the news,
At home, like neighbor Jim,
I'll bet a cent that accident
Would not have happened him.

A Poser.—A calm, blue-eyed, self-composed and self-possessed young lady, in a village "down East," received a long call the other day from a prying old spinster, who, after prolonging her stay even beyond her own conception of the young lady's endurance, came to the main question that had brought her thither: "I've been asked a good many times if you was engaged to Dr. C——. Now if folks enquire again whether you be or not, what shall I tell them I think." "Tell them," answered the young lady, fixing her calm blue eyes in unblushing steadiness upon the inquisitive features of her interrogator; "tell them that you think you don't know, and that you are sure it is none of your business."

"India, my boy," said an Irish officer to a friend on his arrival at Calcutta, "is the finest climate under the sun; but a lot of young fellows come out here, and they drink and they eat, and they drink and they die; and then they write home to their parents a pack of lies and say it is the climate as has killed them."

—Some years ago a man named Disbrow residing in Gardiner, Maine, was missing and though search was made for several days all efforts to find him were ineffectual. Two or three weeks afterward Sam G——, a lank, loose-jointed specimen of humanity, came into town and reported that he had found Disbrow hanging from a tree in a wood near the city which was true.

"Wasn't you afraid when you found him there?" some one asked of Sam.

"Fraid! No Sir!" replied he; "I saw he was hitched."

Scientific Remark.—A lecturer on optics, in explaining the mechanism of the organ of vision remarked, "Let any man gaze closely into his wife's eye, and he will see himself looking so exceedingly small that—" Here the lecturer's voice was drowned by the shouts of laughter and applause which greeted his scientific remark.

A Gentle Hint.—A youth and maiden were walking beneath the blue canopy of the firmament "fretted with golden fires," and the maiden moved by the sublimity of the scene, pointed a taper finger—the one on which the engagement ring is worn—towards the zenith and exclaimed: "Oh Adolphus, isn't jewelry beautiful."

Opinions founded upon mere prejudice, are always sustained with the greatest violence.

A GENTLE WORD.

A gentle word is never lost,
Oh! never then refuse them;
It cheers the heart when sorrow lost
And lulls the cares that bruise one,
It scatters sunshine o'er our way,
It turns our thorns to roses;
It changes weary night to day
And hope and peace discloses.

A gentle word is never lost—
The fallen brothers need it:
How easy said, how small the cost,
What joy and comfort speed it!
Then drive the shadow from thy brow;
A smile can well replace it;
The voice is music when we speak
With gentle words to grace it.

MORAL AND RELIGIOUS.

PARTIAL OBEDIENCE.—It is certain that, in numberless cases, those who mourn over the little that religion is doing for and through them, might find upon closer self inspection that their intention to follow Christ and obey the Heavenly Father is only partial. At best they are but playing at earnestness. Over again, perhaps, they are acting the foolish strategy of Annanias and Sapphira, who would have the credit of giving all, while withholding a part. Nor is it necessary to suppose that all of whom this is true, are deliberately or quite consciously insincere The besetting sin which confronts and defeats their better purposes may be so subtile, or hidden, that its strength if not its existence, is unknown. The key of the field of Waterloo, we are told, was a little chateau that nestled by the road-side. Behind the orchard walls the Cold-Stream Guards were posted. On the outside, the walls were concealed by bushes and fruit trees, and the French fancied how easy a task it would be to sweep through them. So they made their plans, and on through the thickets they rushed, only to come face to face with those unsuspected walls, which now blazed with the deadly fire of musketry. Besetting sins are often masked barriers, over which attempts at better Christian living, and greater faithfulness in doing, are never able to pass. The first need is that these be searched out, and, in Christ's promised help, made captive and disarmed. It is as sure as God's promises and the records of Christian experience can make it, that when one has learned to mean all he says when he prays, and to make and remember his pledges of love and service with unreserved sincerity, his fruit will be unto holiness, and the end eternal life.

JESUS CHRIST was a laborer's son, after the flesh, and was himself a carpenter, and wrought with his hands, and lived all his life in sympathy with the laboring classes of his people; and all truths breathed from his lips were truths of sympathy and humility which it behooves every working man on earth to take heed to.

ABOUT ADVERTISING.—A distinguished and sagacious wholesale merchant of New York recently remarked: "I watch the papers of the locality of my customers, and when I find one who is too stingy to advertise, or if he has withdrawn his advertisement, I immediately close my account him. The man who can't appreciate the benefit of advertising, will never make a successful merchant, and is unsafe to trust."

COAL.—We have established a branch office with John I. Rankin, in the new bank building, where many of our Bellefonte customers will find it convenient to leave, with him, their orders for delivery of our coal.

Bellefonte and County.

——Last Sunday was a good one for patriotic sermons.

——It won't be long until the women and hens want to scratch in the garden.

——Don't drive people away with high rents; if there is any thing will kill a town it is that.

——Half Moon had three women candidates for school directresses. They were only candidates.

——They thought a "Centennial Mayor would be one hundred years behind the age in Philadelphia.

——The Bellefonte M. E. Sunday school had an interesting missionary anniversary meeting on last Thursday evening.

——Aleck. McClure's lecture in Lock Haven on Friday evening next should be about "How my cheek once went back on me."

——Big crowd in town on Friday. Every thing passed off pleasantly. No disturbances, no drunkenness. So much for the Local Option law.

——At the next meeting of the Potter township Farmer's club—at Centre Hall on the 1st Saturday of March, the subject of "fruit and its culture" will be discussed.

——An Eaglevillian lately arose in a Sabbath morning congregation and coolly called the preacher a liar. It requires a large amount of grace to take up a cross of that kind.

——One of the new rooms in Humes' Block, adjoining the First National Bank, is being handsomely fitted up for the occupancy of the Bellefonte post-office, and will be occupied in a few weeks.

——A communication from C. T. Alexander on the depot question has been received, but too late for publication this week It will appear in our next issue Our Boalsburg reporter was also too late this week

——Rev. Father McGovern, late pastor of the St. John's Catholic Church of this place, and at present a resident of Danville, was visiting in Bellefonte last week. We were glad to see him, and so were scores of his friends who have a very warm place in their hearts for him.

——A very pretty little poem, entitled "Esther Wynne," from the pen of Mr. Joe W. Furey, appeared in last week's Watchman. We are surprised that he who has written so many outrageous things could get off such a nice little bouquet of verses as the ones under the above title.

——The Clinton Republican corrects a notice which the Watchman of a recent date published to the effect that Wm. Elwell and Miss Goodman of the former place had hitched for life. Elwell don't want a Good-man for a wife when there are so many good women in that city, and he is sorry the Watchman slandered him.

——The colored public school of this place purposes to give two entertainments in Reynold's Opera House on the 24th and 25th of March. Mr. J. C. Hawkins, teacher of the school, has proved himself to be capable and industrious teacher, and the entertainment of his school will, no doubt, prove instructive and pleasant.

——The usual quiet of Stormstown was disturbed last Wednesday morning by the alarm of fire. John Hall's house was almost entirely destroyed before the flames could be checked. A few years ago Stormstown was almost annihilated by a tremendous fire that only left a few houses, and we had supposed the good people up there wouldn't have any more conflagration amusements after that.

——Mr. George L. Potter, who has for years been with his father in charge of the ticket office and freight depot at this place, will shortly remove to Williamsport, where he and Mr. Adolph Loeb purpose embarking in the merchantile business. Mr. Loeb remains here and Mr. Potter takes charge of the new establishment. We are sorry to lose Mr. Potter; he is one of our best citizens and is a business man of recognized ability and integrity. We commend the firm of Loeb & Potter to the people of Williamsport as one of the best that Bellefonte can produce.

A QUEER TIME.—Winslow gave a party a short time since, when the sleighing was good. But the young ladies and gentlemen walked the short distance to Winslow's house. Winslow is a nice man and, of course, the guests had a pleasant time. Nothing happened until the party broke up and the guests started homeward. It was not very late, and the couples lingered along the road watching the sleighs as they jingled by, laughed at each other's chit-chat, and withal seemed to be quite merry. When they passed the corner of Aquus and Altus streets, they noticed a horse and sleigh shivering by a post. The animal was immediately recognized as the property of old Darkmail, a three month's widower of an adjoining town, who had sufficiently recovered from his bereavement as to be able to pay his addresses to a lone widow who lived hard by. It was plain to those who looked at the horse that be was very uncomfortable from standing so long in the cold. They could not see the beast freeze and they must do something to relieve him. Acting upon the suggestion of Miss Graflitch, they, through the kindness of their hearts, untied the horse and thought to warm him up with exercise. Seating themselves in the sleigh, they trotted away quite pleasantly. But a change came over the spirit of their philanthropy. Darkmail heard his horse jingle the bells and, though engaged in an osculatory pantomime at the time, he felt that it was wicked for anyone to drive his horse but himself, especially as fast as the sound of the sleigh bells indicated, and so soon, too, after his wife's funeral. His fine perceptions of right and wrong intuitively told him that he must search out and punish the offending parties. Tearing himself away from the embrace of his Juliet, he seized his hat and sped like the winds after the sounds of the bells. Darkmail is a windy fellow, and, although he had wasted much of it in the society of his second love, he still had enough left to last him till he overtook the jolly party. They kindly got out and left horse and sleigh at the disposal of the owner, but the latter was not to be torn from his enamorata and allow the calamity to pass unnoticed. No, not he; his ire was up and the outrage must be avenged. Taking possession of the property he drove hurriedly back to his second love, while the gay party wandered off to their homes. When his horse was again tethered and he and his love had discussed the attempted abduction, it was mutually and admiringly resolved to prosecute the party and levy heavy damages, which damages were to be appropriated to the purchase of ear and finger jewelry for the adored one. After many vows and caresses, Darkmail took his departure, resolved to make all out of it that there was in it. The next day Frodsham, the lawyer, was employed to conduct the case. Warrants were issued, and the entire party was arrested on the charge of stealing the horse's blanket. An offer of compromise was made, but the amount tendered, although sufficient to buy a dozen blankets, was not enough to requite Frodsham and buy the promised jewelry. The offenders must do better than that. They, however, refused to increase the amount, and a hearing must be had before a justice. That hearing was a sight worth beholding. Darkmail and his counsel were bound to have justice. Frodsham produced law, showing that the offenders were guilty of a crime of large proportions. He cited a similar case which occurred in the ninth century, when, as he said, a certain monarch had offered his kingdom for a horse, but, failing to make a bargain, had "surruptiously taken one." The whole affair was deeply interesting. Lawyers, witnesses, spectators, plaintiff, and even the grave and reverend justice, became excited. The offenders were held in bail to answer at the next Quarter Sessions, and, in the meantime, Frodsham will fortify himself with the law, but her for whom the damages are to be appropriated must wait to see if the blind goddess shall decide that she is entitled to the promised jewelry. If he fails in this, perhaps Darkmail may be able to raise the amount in some other lawful manner.

——Sometimes it is not just the safest way to have things too clean and nice. This fact was exemplified in the First National Bank on Friday. A customer from the Lower End was standing near one of the large windows—whose French plate glass is as transparent as the atmosphere—making a bargain with a party. When the "word was passed," as if to give durability to the contract, he relieved himself of a fat quid of tobacco. Of course he did not know there was any glass there, and was greatly surprised to see the ugly stain he had made on the lately spotless pane, but his surprise was only equaled by the disgust of William Jones, the janitor.

——Mr. George T. Brew has been appointed to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. George L. Potter, Jr., in the Railroad office. Mr. Brew is a young man of fine qualities, and is admirably suited for the duties of his new position. We congratulate him on his deserved promotion.

——Special attention is invited to Mr. H. Ward's Card, (Millinery Goods) in this issue.

——A reliable and industrious young man can hear of a good situation in a general store by addressing Box 41, Snow Shoe P. O.

——A bill has been introduced in the State Legislature requiring road supervisors to publish an account of all moneys expended.

——If that foreign glass blowing wife beater don't stop his brutal pastime he will find that American laws don't put a premium on such conduct.

——Most forms of Neuralgia are promptly relieved, if not cured by using COSMOLINE. If applied to the face before exposure to the wind, it will tend to prevent an attack.

——The Watchman pokes fun at us because we made an apology for scarcity of local items a few weeks since.—Well, they do the same thing every week, their locals are all apologies.

——We picked up an old copy of the REPUBLICAN the other day, and, in looking it over, were startled to see the following item:

Bellefonte is now the best grain market in Central Pennsylvania. By reference to the special grain report of Shortlidge & Co., it will be seen that they assisted me in this work, which is attended with the blessing of God wherever it is faithfully done in the name of the Lord. R. CRITTENDEN,

Missionary Am. S. S. Union.

We were astonished at this wonderful communication and wondered what our good friend Crittenden could mean, writing such an article. But the mystery was explained when we found that two portions of a spoiled paper, in being used as a wrapper, had been pasted together so thoroughly that it appeared for all the world as if it were one article. The idea of Shortlidge & Co. being puffed up in a Sunday School communication!

——The cry of fire had not astonished our natives for many months until last Friday morning. Of course, the excitement of the first alarm brought every body to the windows. At least this was the case on High street. One small boy, assisted by a couple of Undines, all of whom had good lungs, brought every family, from the Bush House to the jail, to the front windows, where they joined in the everlasting scream of fire. If they had all gathered around the fire they could easily have blowed it out. A stable in the rear of the Conrad House had been set on fire by some villain—it could not have been otherwise—and burned to the ground. It was the property of Joseph Miles. The Logan Hose company was promptly on hand, and, through their efforts, the flames were kept from spreading. The loss is estimated at $400, insured to the amount of $100.

——On last Sunday evening, as the people from across the valley were returning in their wagons and buggies from preaching at Centre Hall, quite a jam occurred beyond Judge Hosterman's. As all seemed to be in a hurry to get home, there was fast driving among those who wished to be foremost, in consequence of which one of the parties in the front wagon had his hat blown off, which caused a sudden halt. The vehicles following each other closely, caused the horses of the third team, Mr. Burkholder's, to spring upon the hind end of Mich. Decker's wagon, which was second, breaking it down completely, and also breaking the pole in his wagon. Miss Sadie M'Cormick received some slight injuries in the jam, as did also another person. The wrecked parties went home afoot, on horseback and as passengers on other rigs. Another young lady who was in a spring wagon with her father, we are told, sprang out in her fright, and was not missed until her father had driven quite a distance.—Reporter.

O. U. A. M.—The grand parade, dinner and ball of the above order came off on Friday last. Our town presented quite a lively appearance during the day and evening. A flag suspended over the street, opposite their hall, bore the inscription "O. U. A. M. Headquarters." Here the Bellefonte Council assembled early in the morning, and were busy with the arrangements until the morning train arrived, which brought delegations from Lock Haven, Salona, Flemington, Tyrone and other places. The procession was formed shortly after twelve o'clock, under command of Col. George A. Bayard, assisted by James Sheridan.

After parading our principal streets, they returned to their hall, where a most excellent dinner was served. The hall was handsomely decorated, and the the table was about the handsomest we ever saw. We believe it could not have been improved. In the evening the young folks enjoyed themselves in a social hop at Bush's hall. We never saw a more orderly and well-behaved crowd of people. Everything passed off pleasantly. There were no casualties, nothing to interrupt the harmony of the entire day's enjoyment. Great credit is due Col. Bayard, James Sheridan, and the rest of the management for the admirable manner in which everything was conducted.

A LITTLE CENTENNIAL.—The great family of Campbells in this State, and their relatives elsewhere, will celebrate the one-hundredth anniversary of the arrival parent stock from the "old country" in May, next. After hunting around through Pennsylvania for a permanent location, for some time, they finally halted under a great oak tree, in the neighborhood of Greenwood, in Mifflin county. Under this tree they resolved to take up the land around them and make it their future home. Their industry soon leveled the forest, and, ere long, a comfortable home, surrounded by broad and fertile fields, teeming, every year with rich harvests, was the reward of their labors. The finest farms in Mifflin county, says our informant, are on the old Campbell reservation. The sturdy oak under which they halted—their charter oak—was protected with a jealous care. They seemed to regard it as a talisman of the happy lives and abundant successes that Providence had bestowed on them, and to-day the old oak still lives, and, although weather worn and aged-looking, yet it buds and brings forth its foliage with as much apparent vigor as it did one hundred years ago. The brave old tree has a warm place in the hearts of all the descendants of original Oak-tree Campbells. The entire connection intend to hold the centennial anniversary of their arrival under this same old oak in May next. Some of the descendants of these old Oak-tree Campbells are living in Harris township and other parts of Centre county, in fact in every State in the Union. May they have a happy reunion under the Centennial Oak.

——Michael Myers, of Buffalo Run, wishes the public to know that he will receive and forward to Harrisburg all petitions asking for the abolition of the County Superintendency. Mr. Myers seems to think that the great mission of his earthly career is to have the office of Superintendent of Schools abolished. No one objects to his right of concentrating his energies and interlect upon this particular branch of reform, but we are afraid his efforts will be futile. Mr. Myers opposed the new constitution until his attention was called to the following section therein:

When the Superintendent of Public Instruction shall be duly qualified, the office of Superintendent of Common School shall cease,

Here, he thought, was just what he wanted. Adopt the new constitution and his mission would be accomplished. Accordingly he worked and voted for the new constitution, confident that the first of the year would see all the county superintendents ousted. After the day of election he rejoiced over the thing exceedingly, and would probably have allowed the superintendency question to drop, had not somebody inform him that the above quoted section only referred to the office of State Superintendent. Now he has resumed his warfare.

——The Lock Haven Brass Band, which was in attendance at the Mechanics parade on Friday, honored the REPUBLICAN office with a serenade on Friday evening. The band is an excellent one and must be a credit to Lock Haven. The Commandery of Knights Templar of this place procured its services when they attended the grand encampment at Baltimore a year or two since, and in consequence, its members think very highly of the Lock Haven boys and their musical ability. Mr. Charles Bricker, their accomplished leader, knows how to train a band. They also visited the other newspaper offices of the town and the residence of Gen'l. Beaver. They delighted all with their fine playing.

——That story in the Watchman about the negro voting in the West Ward under the supervision of James T. Hale, Esq., is mostly all buncum. If, as the Watchman says, the election board informed the voter and his counsel that the "law required a man to pay his tax two months prior to the election," then the election board was mistaken and didn't read the law right. It requires that the tax be paid but one month before the election. We guess the election board didn't make any such mistake, but that the "Watchman" invented the story for the sake of making their article wind up well ——President Miller of the L. C. & S. C. Railroad announces that the road through Penns Valley will be immediately and rapidly pushed on to completion. In a private letter to a gentleman of Centre Hall Mr. Miller says: "I am happy to be able to inform you that before my leaving Philadelphia, arrangements were made with the contractors between Laurelton and the Forks, to resume work on their respective sections. Work to commence on March 1st and proceed moderately. This will, no doubt be cheering news to our Penns Valley friends, as there is now a fair prospect of their having an outlet ere long.

——Quite an excitement was produced on Monday evening when the train arrived, at the cries of a colored woman who was screaming "help," "murder," and kindred other startling things. She proved to be an insame woman who was being brought to town for safe keeping. Of course the usual crowd of store watchers and other loafers who had sauntered out to see the train, made an enthusiastic escort for the unfortunate woman as she passed up High St.

——Brown's Republican, which appeared on Monday, says, "Now we say we have a chip on our shoulder. Let Ned Blanchard and Gen. Beaver knock it off, if they dare." As the writer of the above has some notion of going west, perhaps he wants the above named gentleman to carry him out there on a chip.

——Hon. James Duncan, a celebrated traveler and author, who has relatives living in this region, has been giving interesting lectures to admiring audiences in this part of the state lately, on his travels around the world.

——Rev. F. Riddle of Altoona, that lightning manipulator of sermons, occupied the pulpit of the M. E. Church last Sunday. He is a strong, sensible, rapid preacher, and all were pleased with him.

——On Friday evening the Lock Haven Brass band did itself the honor of serenading Assistant Burgess, Beck, at the Bush House. The dignified A. B has an ear for music, and was delighted.

——Foote, the Berichter man, advertises himself as an auctioneer. If he don't have more to say on the block than he has in his paper, he will be the quietest auctioneer in the state.

——John Cole, the distinguished founder of Coleville, has started a store in that enterprising suburban district.

——Who can furnish us with numbers 15 and 19 of volumn 5 of the REPUBLICAN?

WANTED TO BE HEARD FROM.

If anybody has ever used the thorough and scientific course of treatment recommended by the proprietor of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy for the cure of Catarrh and has not been perfectly cured, the proprietor, Dr. R. V. Pierce, would like to hear from that person, and by addressing him at the World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y., such person, if there be one, will hear of something to his or her advantage, as the Doctor is in earnest when he offers $500 reward for a case of Catarrh which he cannot cure, and is perfectly able to pay it if he fails in a single case, as any one may ascertain upon enquiry. The thorough course of treatment referred to and recommended by Dr. Pierce consists in the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche which is the only means by which the fluid can be carried high up and applied to all parts of the nasal passages and chambers connected therewith in which ulcers exist and from which the discharge proceeds. In addition to this thorough application of the Remedy, which should always be used warm, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery should be taken inwardly as constitutional treatment, without which few cases can be cured, as the disease i always constitutional, and must be treated accordingly. This treatment has no unpleasant features about it, and has the advantage of never driving the disease to the lungs as there is danger of doing by the use of strong, irritating snuffs or poisonous solutions.

PLAIN FACTS.

FRANKFORT, Mich., Sept. 15th, 1873.

A year ago I had a bad cough from the Catarrh which had got in my throat. I tried a good many things but got nothing to do me any good until I used your Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. They cured me in three months, for which I am very thankful. AMOS FISHER.

MARRIED

At the residence of the bride, near Unionville Feb., 19th, by Rev. J. V. P. Hughes, Mr. Jacob Smith to Miss Hannah Wilson both of Unionville, Centre Co., Pa.

Feb. 19th, at Pine Grove Mills by Rev. M. E. Earhart, Mr. Daniel W. Meyers and Miss Emma Stover, both of Harris Township.

DIED.

Near the Agricultural College, on the morning of the 18th. Willie, son of Frank and Eveline Blair, aged 7yrs 4 months and 7 days.

Dear little Willie has gone from earth away; though it is hard to part with those we love, we have a hope that he has been borne on Angels wings to Heaven; to dwell with Jesus forever, where sorrow and pain shall never come to him again.

May the bereaved parents be able to say; the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord, and though he cannot come to them, they can shortly go to him where parting shall be no more. A. E. W.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

Winter is now fairly upon us, and the teams are hastening to the lumber woods in various parts of the country. Our advice to every man who goes to the woods, be he captain, cook, teamster, or any other man, is to take along a good stock of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment and Parson's Purgative Pills. Many months of labor (in the aggregate) may be saved by this precaution.

Bad enough to look and feel bad yourself; but no excuse for having your horse look and feel badly, when for a small sum you can buy Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders, which given in grain two or three times a week, will make him look and feel well.

DYSPEPSIA! DYSPEPSIA! DYSPEPSIA!

Dyspepsia is the most perplexing of all human ailments. Its symptoms are almost infinite in their variety, and the forlorn and despondent victims of the disease often fancy themselves the prey, in turn, of every known malady. This is due, in part, to the close sympathy which exists between the stomach and the brain, and in part also to the fact that any disturbance of the digestive function necessarily disorders the liver, the bowls and the nervous system, and effects, to some extent, the quality of the blood.

E. F. Kunkle's Bitter Wine of Iron a sure cure. This is not a new preparation, to be tried and found wanting; it has been prescribed daily for many years in the practice of eminent physicians with unparalleled success; it is not expected or intended to cure all the diseases to which the human family is subject, but is warranted to cure Dyspepsia in its most obstinate form. Kunkle's Bitter Wine of Iron never fails to cure. Symptoms of Dyspepsia are loss of appetite, wind and rising of the food, dryness of the mouth, heartburn, distension of the stomach and bowels, constipation headache, dizziness, sleeplessness and low spirits. Try the great remedy and be convinced of its merits. Get the genuine. Take only Kunkel's which is put only in $1 bottles. Depot, 259 North Ninth Street Philadelphia.

Centaur Liniment

There is no pain which the Centaur Liniment will not relieve, no swelling they will not subdue, and no lameness which they will not cure. This is strong language, but it is true. They have produced more cures of rheumatism, neuralgia, lock-jaw, palsy, sprains, swellings, caked-breasts scalds, burns, salt-rheum, earache, &c., &c., upon the human frame, and of strains spavin, galls, &c., upon animals in one year than have all other pretended remedies since the world began. They are counter-irritant, all-healing pain reliever. Cripples throw away their crutches, the lame walk, poisonous bites are rendered harmless, and the wounded are healed without a scar. The recipe is published around each bottle. They sell as no articles ever before sold, and they sell because they do just what they pretends to do. Those who now suffer from rheumatism, pain or swelling, deserve to suffer if they will not use Centaur Liniment. More than 1000 certificates of remarkable cures, including frozen limbs, chronic rheumatism, gout, running tumors, &c., have been received. We will send a circular containing certificates, the recipe, &c., gratis, to any one requesting it. One bottle of the yellow wrapper Centaur Liniment is worth one hundred dollars for spavined or sweenied horses and mules, or for screw-worm in sheep.
